Bricker Leaves Readers Wondering, "How Do You Milk a Moose Anyway?"

Columnist Lara Bricker cannot believe her ears when she overhears a fellow coworker talking about moose milking. Much to her surprise, she learns of a man who is busy making gourmet cheese from this very milk in Maine. This moose cheese sparks Bricker's interest and leads her on an adventure to find out more about this moose milking man. With this and several other observational columns, Bricker is sure to have readers doubled over in laughter in her new book, How Do You Milk A Moose Anyway?

This mystery moose-milking man is charging five hundred dollars per pound for this cheese, and is creating quite a stir in the local community. Bricker cannot help but wonder how someone could possibly tame and milk a moose. How is this milk catching on so quickly when the source sounded so disgusting? Who in their right mind is willing to pay so much for moose cheese?

Former investigative reporter turned columnist, Lara Bricker entertains readers with stories about the moose milking man and several current issues. She writes on everything from her moody horse to her unexpected encounter with an Elvis impersonator. With her witty observations and dry sense of humor, readers will not be able to put down this page-turner.

As a news reporter, Lara Bricker has received numerous awards from the New Hampshire Press Association and New England Press Association for her investigative and crime reporting.

Now a busy freelance writer, she writes a twice-monthly humor column that appears in the Exeter News-Letter, Hampton Union, Rockingham News and Portsmouth Herald. Her work has also appeared in the Boston Globe, Women's World Magazine, The Chronicle of the Horse, Northeast Boating Magazine, Portsmouth Magazine, the Equine Journal and others. Originally from Vermont, she grew up on a horse farm and attended the University of New Hampshire where she majored in Equine Science. She opted for a minor in journalism after falling off one too many horses. After a newspaper internship, she was hooked on journalism and decided to make it her career. She lives in Exeter, New Hampshire with her husband Ken, toddler Will, grandmother Gladys, one cat and three retired horses.
